University of Illinois

Chicago • Springfield • Urbana-Champaign

2007 Pocket Facts

The campuses of the University of Illinois—Chicago, Springfield and Urbana-Champaign—aspire to brilliance in teaching, research, public service and economic development. The three campuses are distinctive but equally committed to excellence. Students learn in the classroom, the laboratory and the community.

Today, the University of Illinois is the state's most valuable asset in creating a prosperous future for the people of Illinois, the nation and the world. The U of I educates 70,000 on-campus students a year and thousands more online.

The campuses in Chicago and Urbana-Champaign are comprehensive research universities that advance knowledge and understanding. Each ranks among the top 50 universities nationally for research and development dollars spent in science and engineering. The Springfield campus offers an intimate liberal arts experience with an emphasis on public affairs.

The University makes a significant impact on the economy of the State of Illinois. More than $7 billion swirls through the economy because of the University's payroll, research, construction projects and its purchases of goods, services and equipment. The University also provides a variety of services and resources to citizens.

A Few Highlights

- The Pampered Chef Family Resiliency Program on the Urbana campus works to strengthen families' ability to be resilient in the face of life stressors and to successfully navigate the competing demands of work and family.
- Sessions by UIC College of Medicine staff informed Chicago-area businesses about pandemic flu.
- Interns from the UIS Graduate Public Service Internship program apply their class work and serve state agencies.
- The manure-to-oil program teams Urbana scientists from several colleges with industry partners to design a pilot program for a commercial livestock farm that will convert swine manure into crude oil.
- Hundreds of teaching, research and service programs designed to improve urban life are part of the Great Cities Commitment at UIC.
- Forums held throughout the state by Urbana's College of Veterinary Medicine shared information about the bird flu with the public.
