The University of Illinois In Brief 2000

Delivering the Dividends of Technology
The University of Illinois uses technology and research to provide students with a high-quality, comprehensive education. And, in hundreds of ways across all three campuses of the University—Chicago, Springfield and Urbana-Champaign—researchers use, invent and evaluate technology to benefit people everywhere.

The University of Illinois is a regional, national and international leader in education, research and public service. The U of I graduates more corporate leaders than any other university, public or private, in the state. University research attracts vastly more federal and private support than any other Illinois college or university. And as for service to the public, when the expertise, facilities and pioneering spirit of the University of Illinois are brought to bear on social, industrial, health and many other problems, the outcome is always something better: international online access to the resources of the nation's third largest academic library; more efficient ways to manufacture circuit boards for consumer electronics; cutting-edge veterinary care; better-fitting artificial joints, and much more.

University Profile

Total on-campus enrollment: 64,947 (Fall 1999)

Full-time equivalent employees: faculty, 5,225; administrative and professional, 5,641; support staff, 11,263 (Fall 1999)

Graduate assistants: 8,172 (Fall 1999)

Degrees awarded: 15,519 (1998-99)

Living alumni: 484,716; Alumni Association membership 119,140

Operating budget: $2.4 billion (1999-2000)

Separately funded research: $463.2 million (1999-2000)

Student organizations: 1,041 (Fall 1999)

Physical plant: The University consists of more than 800 buildings with a building replacement cost of $4.7 billion. The three campuses encompass 2,425 acres, with additional holdings totaling 9,319 acres (including an airport, agriculture experiment fields, Allerton Park, research sites, timber reserves and natural areas).

Academic-Year Costs

In-state base tuition for the 1999-2000 school year (two semesters) is $3,138 at UIC, $2,790 at UIS, and $3,546 at UUIC. Annual base tuition for in-state graduate students is $3,750 at UIC, $2,508 at UIS, and $4,040 at UUIC. Students enrolled in the professional schools pay varying rates: dentistry, $10,584; law, $8,024; medicine, $16,294 (first and second year students; all others pay $12,294); pharmacy, $7,644 (first and second year students; all others pay $4,144); and veterinary medicine, $8,282. Out-of-state students are charged approximately three times the tuition that Illinois residents pay.

Mandatory fees (excluding refundable fees), which support student union buildings, recreation, counseling, health services and insurance, differ at the three campuses. For a two-semester academic year, UIC students are assessed fees of $1,510 (medical students pay an additional disability insurance fee); UIS students are assessed $518; and UIUC undergraduate students are assessed $1,224, graduate students $1,322. On-campus housing costs also vary from campus to campus. For 1999-2000, undergraduate room and board at UIC averages $5,856; at UIS, $2,124; and at UIUC, $5,160. Rates are dependent upon the number of people per room and meal plan options; the standard is double occupancy with a 14-meal per week plan. UIS offers no meal plan; the figure shown reflects apartment-style living in four-bedroom units.

Student Financial Aid

Financial aid totaling $457 million assisted U of I students in 1997-98. Approximately 132,585 awards were made to 49,292 students in Chicago, Springfield and Urbana-Champaign. "Gift" aid, including scholarships, grants, fellowships, and tuition and fee waivers, accounted for 42 percent of the total. Employment and loans covered 58 percent. Students earned more than $100 million from university-related jobs in 1997-98.
At the University of Illinois at Chicago, virtual practice makes perfect.

Surgeons face incredible challenges when they operate on the ear. Its vital nerves, membranes, blood vessels and tiny sound-conductors are all encased in bone. With few visible landmarks, surgeons must rely on the precise knowledge of these structures to operate safely. Thanks to head and neck surgeon Theodore Mason and the Virtual Reality in Medicine Laboratory, others who aspire to this specialty can supplement their training on a virtual ear that allows them to maneuver around this complicated organ from any internal or external vantage point.

Located within walking distance of the Loop in the heart of Chicago, the University of Illinois at Chicago (UIC) is an international leader in health-related research. The first effective treatment for sickle-cell anemia was developed here, and groundbreaking research in the identification of cancer-fighting properties in natural products is ongoing. The UIC Medical Center provides top-quality care to 400,000 patients a year. One in every six Illinois physicians is a UIC graduate.

Formed in 1982 by the consolidation of the Medical Center campus and the Chicago Circle campus, UIC ably demonstrates how revolutionary thinking and collaboration can result in important advances—whether it be using innovations in engineering to improve the fit of artificial joints or applying artificial intelligence solutions to complex manufacturing problems.

When UIS professor Charles Schweighauser noticed that people who have difficulty standing weren’t able to stargaze through a conventional telescope, he decided to solve the problem. The result? A telescope that can be used by people who use wheelchairs. It combines traditional optical design with the unique feature of a fixed eyepiece. The first such telescope to be built, it is used for both teaching and public viewings.

Previously known as Sangamon State University, UIS joined the University of Illinois in 1995. The smallest of the U of I’s three campuses, UIS is located on 746 acres on the southeast side of the state capital. Excellent teaching, professional development and practical experience are hallmarks of the institution, which celebrates its 50th anniversary in 2000.

UIS offers a range of academic and professional programs to transfer, commuter, residential and online students at the junior, senior and graduate levels. In October 1999, the Illinois Board of Higher Education approved a proposal for UIS’ first four-year baccalaureate program. Capital Scholars—which will emphasize public affairs, leadership development and civic life—will admit its first class of first-year students in the fall of 2001.

The University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign is building a solid reputation in the field of microelectromechanical systems (MEMS) technology. Combining microcircuitry with tiny mechanical devices embedded in semiconductor chips, instruments developed through research in this field can gather information and use it to control the environment. A research team led by Mike Philpott and Mark Shannon developed a tiny, flexible refrigerator—complete with compressor and heat exchanger—that is about one-eighth inch thick. Such devices may one day be sewn into fabric to create lightweight, wearable coolers—an application that will have great benefit for both military personnel and firefighters—or incorporated into the design of laptop computers and automobiles.

The largest and most prestigious public university in the state, the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign is home to some of the nation’s top-ranked programs in agriculture, business, communications, engineering, liberal arts, library science and more. The 1999 Fiske Guide to Colleges gave the Urbana-Champaign campus its highest rating, five stars, and U.S. News & World Report ranked it among the top ten public universities in the nation.

The University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign boasts the third largest academic library among all universities in the United States. It is home to more than 80 research centers, laboratories and institutes, including the National Center for Supercomputing Applications, the lead organization in the National Science Foundation-funded effort to design a national computational and information infrastructure. Researchers at Urbana-Champaign also are leading the way in plant and animal genetics research, digital imaging, transportation and food safety, and much more.

Revenue by Source

Spending by function

Campaign Illinois The University of Illinois was one of the first public universities to undertake a capital campaign with a goal of raising $1 billion in private donations. The University not only met but surpassed its goal months ahead of schedule. A year-end report from the University of Illinois Foundation shows Campaign Illinois gifts and pledges totaling $1,207,492,073 as of June 30, 1999. The graph below depicts how that money will be used.

Voluntary Support to the University of Illinois

Fiscal year 1999: $140.6 million

Nearly 93,343 separate gifts were made to the University of Illinois through the University Foundation in FY99; an additional 3,596 gifts went directly to the U of I. During the five years ended in June 1999, the University and the University Foundation received more than $633 million in gift income.
